A Few Proposals, Not Necessarily Modest In Any Sense

Homelessness

Jim Leftwich

10:11 AM

to Tomislav

Sue and I were talking about this a few days ago.

We need a federal agency, something like the Department of Pragmatic Housing Solutions (DPHS).

With National headquarters in DC, with maybe 8 regional offices (New England, Mid-Atlantic, South, Mid-West, Great Lakes, Great Plains, Inter-Mountain, West Coast), plus state and local offices.

Field agents identify homeless populations.

Real Estate Management Coordinators (REMCs) identify available housing units.

Socialist Expropriation Teams (SETs) contact landlords and inform them of the terms of their agreement.

Landlords have no input and the terms are not negotiable.

Residents of the PragSo (Pragmatic Solutions) Units are given Guaranteed Basic Incomes, 24/7 access to free in-house health care providers (of all varieties), transportation, clothing, job training, etc.

We want this to work, right? So in three years the CIA factbook listing for the United States on the line for Homelessness will be "N/A", like the Factbook listing for Percentage of population living under the poverty line in Finland.

Q: How does the country benefit from homelessness? A: It does not benefit at all.

Therefore, the country will take the necessary steps to eliminate homelessness.

Predictable, dishonest complaint: It won't work. The U.S. is too big. PragSo response: Fine.

On and on...

Government has to be stronger than business, at every level.

Otherwise, the internal logic of capitalism will destroy us.

The idea that it can't be fixed is a sad joke. A self-fulfilling prophecy of mass suicide.

We aren't dealing with laws of physics, we're dealing with provisional power relations.

Jobs

Jim Leftwich

10:57 AM

to Tomislav

There are too many jobs, and too many people are working. We need a National Jobs Elimination program.

This is actually an urgent need, and an entirely serious proposal, so why does it sound so utterly ridiculous?

I think we know why.

Now shut up and get back to work.

Monetization

Jim Leftwich 3:31 PM

to Tomislav

We need to demonetize human intersection points.

The capitalist goal has been to maximize monetized intersection points in the daily lives of human individuals. If we are to survive as a species, we need to collectively pursue the opposite of that goal.

We need to minimize, and eventually eliminate, monetized intersection points in the daily lives of human individuals.

Food Waste

Jim Leftwich

3:42 PM

to Tomislav

Food-waste-as-business-practice is unacceptably irresponsible and damaging. When a business consistently wastes food as part of its pursuit of profits, while some members of society (children, women, and adult men) are unable to adequately feed themselves, that business should have its license to sell food revoked.

It is absurd, if not clinically insane, to act as if maximizing profits is more important than quality of life.

We need to delegitimize that way of thinking, up to and including making illegal behaviors, policies, and laws in which it is embodied, or by which it is encouraged.
